Essay Prompts (CHOOSE ONLY ONE):

Prompt 1) Historians define eras based on similarities and generalizations in various aspects of politics, economics, religion, society, technology and the arts. Turning points are often the beginning or the end for a time period, or era in global history and mark a significant change in the way humans live, interact and relate to the world around them. Explain which period or event in global history marks the most significant era or turning point for human society.

Prompt 2) Turning points and historical eras are often retrospectively recorded/named by historians, and the people during that time frequently have too narrow a perspective and are unable to see the broad sweeping generalizations which might later categorize the period in which they live. What will the time period that encompasses your life be known as or known for? How will it compare to the other major turning points of global history already named and understood?
